

Talking to your student about money

5 topics that every parent should discuss with their student

POWERED BY

Accounts provided by Customers Bank
Member FDIC

© 2021 BMTX, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of BM Technologies, Inc. All Rights Reserved.
All other names and logos are owned by their respective owners.

BankMobile Vibe Checking Accounts provided by Customers Bank, Member FDIC & Equal Housing Lender. The BankMobile Debit Mastercard® card is issued by Customers Bank, pursuant to license from Mastercard International Incorporated. The card is administered by Customers Bank.

You were very organized...

You purchased a bed-in-the-bag, a desk lamp, a laptop, a month's supply of socks and all the other essentials recommended by your child's college or university. You packed up the car, drove miles to get there, spent hours unloading and finally headed home (perhaps a little teary-eyed). But if you're like a lot of parents, the other important talk may have been missed — the one about money and how your new college freshman will manage it on their own for the first time.

To help you get started, we've compiled five topics that every parent should discuss with their student along with some suggested questions you may have overlooked.

Clarify expectations

- Who is paying for what?
- What do you plan to do if you're short on money?

While you may have already talked about this, it is a good idea to review how much college is going to cost each year and clarify what portion you are committed to paying for. Be sure to discuss all costs associated with going to school such as books, travel, cellphone charges, food and other miscellaneous living expenses. These are areas that students often overlook, and you will want to be clear about how much of these costs, if any, you will be covering. If they are receiving financial aid, make sure they know the difference between grants and loans and who will be responsible for paying off those loans once they have graduated.

It's also a good idea to estimate what their student loan payments are likely to be and compare them to what they expect to earn as a starting salary when they graduate. Aim to keep those monthly payments to no more than 10 percent of their expected monthly salary.

Recommend setting up a budget

- How much money do you have and how will you make sure you have enough to last the semester/academic year?
- How much will you need each month to pay your bills and other expenses?
- What is the difference between a need and a want?

One of the major money pitfalls new college students fall into is spending too much on things like snacks and takeout. Creating a budget will help your student gain control and balance needs with wants. It doesn't have to be complicated, just something to create a realistic picture of how much money they will have and/or earn; and how they plan to spend those funds over the course of the semester or year. We provide convenient and easy-to-use budgeting tools to track spending, set up monthly budgets, monitor cash flows and view spending history through the BankMobile Vibe Checking Account. Your student can also set up reserves to achieve their financial goals and get a more accurate view of their financials by viewing a financial snapshot.

Help encourage your student to include a small cushion for unexpected expenses; it will help your student set priorities of what bills must be paid each month and what expenses may need to be reduced.

If they are on a meal plan, for example, remind them to take full advantage of what they have already paid for instead of eating out. Also, warn them about the dangers of loaning money to other students or getting in the habit of treating friends when they go out.

Talk about protecting personal information

- Do you know what identity theft is?
- What should you do if your debit or credit card is lost or stolen?

Identity theft is a fast-growing problem. Students should know how to safeguard payment cards and what to do if a card is lost. Most debit and credit card companies offer protection against fraudulent activity. However, they must be notified right away. There are other ways that thieves can gain access to personal information such as using skimmers on card swiping machines, phishing via phone or email solicitations and computer hacking. Remind your student to carefully review bank and credit card statements, shred unwanted documents that contain personal information, lock up personal records, use secure internet connections and never give out personal information unless the requesting source is truly legitimate.

Point out payment card differences.

- What's the difference between debit cards, prepaid cards and credit cards?
- What are your payment obligations when using a credit card?
- What is a credit score and how can being late a payment affect it?

There are a number of ways to pay for things without using cash or a check. However, they are very different. A debit card is linked directly to a bank account so when a purchase is made by swiping the card, the student is using funds he or she already has. A prepaid card is preloaded, usually by parents. It contains a limited amount of money which can be reloaded when the funds run out. Using a credit card, however, means the student is borrowing money from whatever financial institution issued the card. If the balance isn't paid off each month, interest charges will accrue and can add up quickly.

Missing or being late with credit card payments and other bills will damage a student's credit score, something that may take years to repair. The federal CARD Act implemented in 2010 puts age limits on credit cards—you can't get one if you're under 21 unless you have a co-signer or can document that you have enough income to make the payments. If you do decide to co-sign, make sure the credit limit is set to an amount that allows the balance to be paid in full every month.

Explain how to use a bank account

- How do you plan to keep track of your banking transactions?
- Do you know how to balance your bank account?
- What happens if you overdraw your bank account?

Often, money management problems in college can be traced back to a student's initial banking experiences. It is really important to help students understand how to use a bank account and how to keep and reconcile their own records.

Now may be the time to evaluate what type of checking account is right for your student, even if they already have one. Often, college students can receive better offers on bank accounts. Since your school delivers refunds using the BankMobile Disbursement platform, your student has access to the BankMobile Vibe Checking Account which is a digital-only, FDIC insured checking account with access to 55,000 fee-free Allpoint® ATMs and a one-of-a-kind recognition program with an opportunity to pay off their student loan debt. Students can also earn interest on the BankMobile Vibe Checking Account with qualifying deposits and have access to an interest-bearing savings account. They can continue to use these accounts when they are no longer a student. To help decide what option is right for your student, we've provided a comparison chart of features and fees of the BankMobile Vibe Checking Account compared to the three most common student bank accounts used by the millions of students we serve.

To view our account comparison chart, please visit: bankmobilevibe.com/compare ↗

For a complete list of features and fees on the account, check out the BankMobile Vibe Checking Account Fee Schedule and Interest Rate Information and Account Terms and Conditions.

For more information about the BankMobile process, please visit:

bankmobiledisbursements.com/refundchoices ↗

05